29th Sunday in Ordinary Time

As people are positioning themselves for the approaching elections, we are inundated with individual presentations trying to convince us why they are the right choice for us to make. What this really means is that they are each begging us to hire them because they think that they will serve us better. Our community, and indeed the whole country, needs a servant if we can use that designation. One thing the Gospel brings out to us today is that there are many people who seek leadership but quite a negligible number seek to be servants. We saw that in the ten disciples who became indignant, because of the audacity of the two brothers to publicize their request. That became the opening for the teaching of what leadership among the followers of Jesus should look like. A lot had been written of the leadership style of Jesus as that of a servant leader; but I tend to think that most descriptions of it do not get into the heart of who a servant is. When you get into that bunker I doubt if any of the world leaders is truly a servant of the people—even the Pope is referred to as “servus servorum Dei”. Be that as it may, as followers of Jesus, leadership as service is a journey to help others realize their salvation. The Servants I know from Scripture and some traditions are people who help their masters get what they want. Last week we saw that what a Christian ultimately wants is the Kingdom. Therefore, every Christian leader must be ready to help others be on the path to the Kingdom. That is how we serve. On the other hand, the teaching was not only to the Apostles but to all of us—leaders and followers. We are all called to service in the Body of Christ and that service is to help each other to walk faithfully on the way to the Kingdom. This may not be easy but according to our second reading Jesus, our High Priest, since He was human, can understand the limitations of our humanity once we are known and seen to be making effort. Are you helping the people in your life to make heaven or leading them away from heaven’s path?
